

Sustainability and Social Responsibility

In GMC Maritime, sustainability and corporate social responsibility have a strategic importance and are seen as a key prerequisite for the company's long-term results and value creation.

Social responsibility is about how values are created. Sustainable development is about how the business affects people, the environment and society.

The company's strategic and business priorities will contribute to sustainable development, as well as create attractiveness among our stakeholders, whether it's owners, employees, suppliers, customers, collaborators, government agencies or volunteer organizations.

Social responsibility is necessary to ensure the sustainable development of our business.

As a business, we can only grow when economics and society are in interaction. Therefore, we must constantly focus on community-friendly measures and improvements. In this way, we will help people we employ, companies we provide services to, and the society we operate in, to achieve their full potential - both in the short and long term.

For GMC, sustainability is a good business ethic and moral, and contributes to an even stronger awareness of the environment we work in daily. We will take care of the environment and ensure that it is managed in a way that safeguards new generations.
